"Home Run" Baker was on the coaching lines. He may get into the Cleveland series the latter part of the week.

Nick Cullop should get a job with the movies during the off season as a soldier who gets flopped by a shell during the heat of battle. Nick would not need to bother with any rehearsals, as he has had lots of practice. Just before the Yanks went West on the "disaster" trip Nick toppled over in the box when he yanked some muscles from off their proper ribs. Yesterday Nick took the count again, but he came up smiling.

Saperbas Overcome Lead.

Saperbas Overcome Lead.

The Superbas did not long remain in the rear, for they tailied a quartet of runs in the second inning on a combination of ringing hits and excusable errors. Lefty Tyler was soundly bumped in the second, but sharp fielding would have prevented one of the runs. Myers opened the through one of the day—and out the afternoon. Charley Herzog was hind a swing, and like a shot from a 42 centimeter gun it struck Nick on the left kneecap. Cullop never asked the reason why, but toppled over as swiftly as though Jess Willard had tapped his right under Nick's chin. Fellow tossers and Elephants gathered around the stricken hero, offering succor, advice and struckers. When the sum of the s

Four runs were in and not man was out. Nabors then started to pitch, and keeled over the next three Yanks on easy chances.

Athletics Make Brave Stand.

The Athletics fought back, and came within a run of a tie. In the second McInnis scored on his double to left and wild pitch, third on McElwee's out, and scored when Pick bounced a single off Cullop's hand. Haley sent a hefty single to centre, and Donovan whistled.
